the two turbulent racing afternoons

From a crowd of 50,000 on Saturday and another of 30,000 yesterday, that of 5,000 this afternoon seemed only a handful, yet it is an average daily attendance. But unfortunately the majority of race lovers are compelled to work and holidays are the only days that permit of their en-

The weather was very warm and muggy this afternoon, so that a big crowd would have spent an unpleasant and perspiring day.

Two stakes, the Partridge, for two-Handicap, at six furlongs on the main track, were the features of the afternoon, and both furnished very interesting fields.

The track was in superb condition and all conditions favored good
